REFEL SHART SHOOTERS.—It has been asserted, upon sufficient authority, that the commanders of the insurgents have availed themselves of the ritte, for the organization of the sharp-shootthat these men are directed to select as their targets the officers of the national army. Some evidence of the truth of the story may be found in the affair of Sunday. The number of officers illed and injured is out of all proportion to the mber of the rank and file, showing that the nemy had not used their weapons indiscrimintely. To the efficiency of these practiced marksnen may also be ascribed another circumstance, which has excited surprise, namely, the fact that nearly every borse of the artillery trains was shot, and that, for this reason, the guns had to be left behind. Clearly, there cannot be too much activity in bringing the same description of skill to the aid of our army.

Everybody no doubt at one time or other has heard that peach crops contiguous to large deadenings on fire or to burning log-heaps, have been protected from frost when winds have carried the smoke over and through the orehard. This process is but softening the temperature by mingling artificial heat with the cold air, and, leaving the cost and details for another article, I propose to offer a few hints, resulting from practice touching the effiency of preserving the fruit crop from spring

SPROULE & MANDEVILLE, The apricot blooms so early that we rarely ave a season in which the crop would not be fleeted more or less seriously by frost, and for affected more or less seriously by frost, and for several years I have protected portions of my crop by the application of artiticial means— sometimes placing warm water under the trees, but generally resorting to small lires. The fuels tried have been cobs, sawdust, wood, and stonecoal. In no instance has a failure occurred unless the fires had been neg-lected too long (and there is much danger of the fires getting too low when cobs or other light tires getting too low when cobs or other light fuel is used). I do not know that a better idea could be given to the orchardist of what he dare undertake and yet hope for success than my experience of a night in March last. greater. Neither the l'each, Apple, l'ear, or Grape, sceuts capable of bearing without injury so intense a degree of cold as the Cherry, but they are all alike in this, that the greater the development of the hud the less the degree of cold they can stand without injury.

A fickle climate like Kentucky, therefore, endangers the life of the fruit crop in two principal modes: First, a few genial showers and warm days in autumn or early winter may give such a start to the fruit-bad as to increase greatly its susceptibility to harm by subsequent intense cold; or, secondly, a warm spell in spring may bring the buds into flowers before the frosts of the season are over. Within twenty years the peach crop has been four times winter killed, six times killed in April or May, and we have enjoyed ten crops. Of the crops winter-killed, those of 1856 and '57 chicient and practical can be done toward checking the intimely swell of the fruit-bul. The one is to seeme the existence of a healthy system of leaves up to the coming of bard frosts in September, thereby avoiding a pre-mature rest in the current year's circulation of sap, as this state of rest precedes lie swell of next year's bud. The other method of checking an urtimely swell of the fruit-bud is to select an elerated site for the orchard. It would require warmer weather and a long would require warmer weather and a longer centinuation of it to excite growth on the hills than upon the plains. The most reliable means for securing a healthy system of leaves I take to be planting in a soil naturally dry or one rendred so by draining. It appears to me that any attempt on the part of man to soften the vigor of one of those Both theory and observed vation show us that elevated sites can borrow as much heat from the surrounding and super-ahundant air as will compensate for the waste by radiation, and that with moderate care in treatment there need be no loss of fruit crops except during winters intensely cold, as that of 1857. But, as every one anxious to enjoy the luxury of good fruit cannot go to the mountains to grow it, I propose to say something of what may be done even on the plains in protecting fruit from spring frosts by artificial heat. after 9 o'clock it clouded up and commenced snowing, and we hopefully continued to fire till near one o'clock, knowing that temperature changes but little in cloudy weather; but about one o'clock the clouds disappeared, leaving the thermometer at a killing temperature with five hours to sink lower—the ground covered with snow, a condition, above all others, calculated to produce a rapid increase of cold. More because I hated to give up thun because I expected to do good, the fires were kept up all night and next day. Rather as a matter of astonishment than expectation, I found that, while the thermometer had sunk to 18 degrees aboye zero, and the white petals had been as completely changed in consistency and color as though they had been dipped in boiling ley, a large portion of the fruitlets were unharmed.

We believe that they are organizing Home Guards as fast as they can, but they are doing it openly and in strict conformity with the laws of the State. They seek no concealment. laws of the State. They seek no concealment, for they are doing only what they feel that May God speed the right.

Kou will hear a good account of us in August. May God speed the right.

There are no Union men in Kentucky who ntend to violate Kentucky's neutrality. Our sion; they contemplate noue. Their whole purpose is to act upon the defensive; to guard their rights as free and iudependent citizens; to resist promptly and effectually any movemen ome from what quarter it may, to force lien tucky out of the Union against the will, or without the authority, of a majority of her eople.

Our Union men arc for peace. All of them are for peace. They will, for the sake of peace, bear all and do all that can he borne and done consistently with safety and honor. But they believe that there is a deep, extensive, and most atrocious conspiracy for the subversion of the loyalty of Kentucky, and they have made up their minds, if such a censpiracy shall be developed, to resist the conpirators with all the might of their souls and bodies. Before they will permit Kentucky to be forced into disunion, they will make her soi wear a deeper and a darker red than it eve wore in the days of the savages.

The Frankfort Commonwealth says the Courie was at one time an emancipation paper, is might have truly added, that then Mr. W. D. Gallagher was its editor.—Courier. That's all a mistake. The Courier, that knows so little about many other things, seems to know very little about itself. In 1848 and 1840, when that paper put itself forward as the champion of abolition, Mr. Gallagher was not its Editor. Its only Editor at that time, known to the public, was Mr. W. N. Haldeman, its present proprietor-in-chief. Mr. Gallagher, in a subsequent year, beame the Chief Editor of the Conrier, and, if e was an emancipationist, Mr. Haldeman knew the fact when he took him into the concern. But, whilst Mr. Gallagher was in the Courier, it was not an emancipation paper. If Mr. G. held emancipation opinions, he did not obtrude them upon the public.

Col. Blanton Duncan yesterday resigned his command of the first Kentucky battaliou. The causes leading to this action are wholly of a private and personal character, and have no connection whatever with the public service or the giest cause of Southern independent.

Major Bidwell, of the Michigan First Regiment, who assumed command after Wilcox fell, was yesterday (the 22d) and is to-day gathering up his men. He estimates that thirty or forty will cover the killed, and double thet number the wounded, in his regiment.

Your correspondent can himself hear personel testimony to the interpicity of the gallant First German Rifles. While the panic was et its very beight, the commander of the division rode up to Col. Blenker, after vainly exerting himself to etem the frantic tide of fugitives, and remarked to him, "Colonel, you and your regiment can save the requilic." To which the fearless commanding the Second division, deserves apecial notice. He was shot in the throat whila directing in person the Second Rhode Island regiment, in its gallant essault upon a battery. Just before being wounded, he had given an order to one of his aids for a distant regiment. The aid was about galloping off, when he saw the Colonel fall from his horse. Ha immediately came to his assistance, but the Colonel motioned him off, telling him, "deliver your order, and never mind me—I will take care of myself" in the action.

How absolute the disintegration of the grand army was, is fully evidenced by the fact that brigade commanders would be seen on Sunday night between Centreville ard Fairfax Conrt Honse without an aid or a man of their brigades within ten miles of them.

It is a singular fact that, although the Fire Zonaves sustained such heavy losses, and were subjected to such a terrible fire front ertillery end musketry, not a single one of the company officers was killed or injured, except two or three who received slight flesh wounds.

The Enemy Apprised of the Movements of the Union Army—It is evident now that the robels have meeus of ascertaining accurately and immediately the orders issued in relation to the movements of our troops. They had every reason to believe that the main ettack on their lines would be made at Blacklum's Ford, where the engagement of Thursday had occurred, and in that belief they would reasonably have placed the greatest body of their troops at that point. This was the calculation on our side. The order of battle was not disclosed, even to division commanders, until after ten o'clock on Saturday night. By these orders the main attack was directed to be made by the right wing, proceeding by way of Sudley's Spring, three miles above Blackhum's Ford, and a mile and a half above the Warrensen bridge.

The movement was made promptly, yet the
